Rightness as Fairness Marcus Arvan, 2016-03-29 Rightness as Fairness provides a uniquely fruitful method of principled fair negotiation for resolving applied moral and political issues that requires merging principled debate with real world negotiation

Stability and Justification in Hume's Treatise Louis E. Loeb, 2002 Louis Loeb argues that the paradoxical corollary to Hume's stability based theory stated in his Treatise on Human Nature is that no belief generating mechanism is fully stable or justified for a fully reflective person

Grounded Ethics Max Hocutt, Scientific naturalism basing beliefs on empirical evidence has now triumphed in every field of inquiry except moral philosophy There it is still thought appropriate to cite otherworldly standards known by divine revelation or moral intuition In Grounded Ethics Max Hocutt argues that since there is no transcendent reality on which to base the claims of ethics normative truth must be sought in the desires of individuals and the conventions of societies Hocutt begins with an empiricist analysis of normative judgments Following B F Skinner he asserts that we call good what reinforces our desires and that we call right or just what we desire to reinforce Consequently desire is the immediate measure of both goodness and justice Acknowledging that goodness is relative to individual preferences and justice is relative to social norms Hocutt denies that goodness is a matter of personal opinion and that every society's institutions are as good as every other's Instead he says the conduct of individuals and the customs of societies must ultimately be evaluated by how well they serve biologically based needs These must be discovered empirically because they cannot be known a priori In support of this analysis Hocutt challenges rationalist belief that normative concepts cannot be defined in empirical terms because they are rooted in divine law or ideals of pure reason Against this view Hocutt argues that if the moral law exists only as an ideal it is not binding in the same sense as the empirically known laws and moralities of actual societies He also points out that rationalist intuitions are best understood as expressions of animal instinct socially conditioned prejudice and personal preference In addition he offers extensive critiques of major philosophers both ancient and modern who hold contrary views All of this is meant to show that there is no escaping the empirical A sensible ethics must be built on observable facts it cannot be pulled from a vague but pious rationalist sky Hocutt's demonstration of this thesis will interest philosophers behavioral biologists sociologists and ethicists Max Hocutt is professor of philosophy at the University of Alabama in Tuscaloosa He is the author of The Elements of Logical Analysis and Inference and First Philosophy
