Gender is widely acknowledged as a crucial determinant in the pathogenesis progression and therapeutic response of various malignancies With the advancement of our understanding of tumor biology it has become increasingly evident that gender disparities play a pivotal role in shaping the dynamics and outcomes of these diseases In numerous prevalent cancer types males demonstrate inferior disease progression and prognosis compared to their female counterparts This phenomenon can be attributed in part to distinctive aspects of tumor immunity A captivating realm of scientific inquiry particularly in the domain of genomic sequencing has enabled the identification of specific genetic mutations and biomarkers that may serve as promising targets for therapeutic interventions Notably interventions designed to inhibit androgen signaling have exhibited noteworthy efficacy in augmenting the therapeutic potential of immunotherapy specifically in male patients      BLADDER CANCER ,2018      Isocyanates: Advances in Research and Application: 2011 Edition ,2012-01-09

This Research Topic is part of a series with Genomic Discoveries and Pharmaceutical Development in Urologic Tumors Urologic tumors encompass cancers of the prostate bladder kidney testis and adrenal glands Recent years have witnessed significant advancements in understanding the genomic landscape of urologic tumors leading to the emergence of novel therapeutic strategies A particularly exciting area of research lies in genomic sequencing enabling the identification of specific genetic mutations and biomarkers that can be targeted with drugs For instance drugs targeting the androgen receptor AR pathway such as abiraterone and enzalutamide have shown efficacy in treating prostate cancers with genetic alterations in this pathway. Additionally, drugs like sunitinib and pazopanib, which target the vascular endothelial growth factor (VEGF) pathway, have significantly improved survival rates for patients with metastatic renal cell carcinoma (RCC). Another promising avenue of research focuses on repurposing drugs for tumor treatment. This approach offers a valuable means of discovering new cancer treatments by utilizing drugs already approved for other conditions and with known pharmacology. By doing so, researchers can reduce the time cost and risk associated with drug development while still providing effective therapies. For instance, beta blockers, commonly used for high blood pressure and heart disease, have demonstrated potential in reducing the risk of cancer spread and improving survival in patients with prostate and bladder cancers. Overall, genomic discoveries in urologic tumors have yielded fresh insights into the mechanisms of cancer progression, leading to the development of personalized therapies and new treatments. This Research Topic aims to gather articles that shed light on the interaction between genomics and pharmacology, driving new investigations into the mechanisms of urologic cancer and the development of innovative anti-cancer drugs. We welcome submissions covering, but not limited to, the following areas:

- Preclinical studies: Investigate the safety and efficacy of potential drugs in animal models that mimic human urologic tumors, focusing specifically on genetic and molecular characteristics.
- Clinical trials: Conduct robust trials to evaluate the safety, efficacy, and optimal dosing of drugs for urologic tumors, utilizing genomic and molecular data to guide patient selection and treatment strategies.
- Artificial intelligence: Employ AI for genomic analysis to identify drug targets and optimize drug development processes, improving the speed and precision of discovering treatments for urologic cancers.
- Drug screening and in vivo studies: Screen compounds for activity against specific genetic targets in urologic tumors, followed by in vivo studies to assess their therapeutic potential and toxicity profiles.
- Modification of existing drugs: Enhance existing drug efficacy and safety through molecular modifications, combination therapies, or improved delivery methods tailored to the genetic profiles of urologic tumors.

Bladder Tumors:
Vinata B. Lokeshwar,Axel S. Merseburger,Stefan H. Hautmann,2010-12-16 Bladder cancer is a common cancer of the urinary tract It is the fourth leading cause of cancer related death among men and the seventh among women Clinical management of bladder cancer is challenging because of the heterogeneity among bladder tumors with respect to invasion and metastasis frequent occurrence of new tumors in the bladder among patients treated with bladder preservation treatments and poor prognosis of patients with tumors that invade the bladder muscle and beyond Due to these factors it has been said that the cost per patient of bladder cancer from diagnosis to death is the highest of all cancers In addition to it being a significant health problem bladder cancer is an interesting cancer to study in many ways than one For example Environmental factors such as cigarette smoking and other carcinogens play a major role in the development of transitional carcinoma of the bladder whereas schistosomiasis a protozoan infection results in squamous cell carcinoma of the bladder Different molecular pathways with distinct molecular signatures appear to be involved in the development of low grade versus high grade bladder tumors Currently being monitored by an invasive endoscopic procedure cystectomy with urine cytology as an adjunct bladder cancer is at the forefront of developing cancer biomarkers for non invasive detection Due to the differences in the invasive and metastatic potential of bladder tumors treatment options differ depending upon tumor grade and stage New advances are being made in treatment options to improve the outcome and quality of life for patients with bladder cancer Similarly new molecular nomograms are being discovered to predict treatment outcome so that individualized treatment options can be offered to patients

Combination Therapy in Urological Malignancy Philip Henry Smith,1989 Any discussion of the present success in management of urological cancers evokes a mixed response Oncologists and urologists can enjoy the success with chemotherapy for testicular cancers but cannot forget the dismal results with any form of treatment other than surgery for renal carcinoma But these are the less frequent urological tumours what are the attitudes to the more common prostate and bladder cancers Intensive study many clinical trials and much debate lead us to the conclusion that we understand them better we can tailor the treatment more appropriately to the individual patient but there remains some uncertainty as to the overall success that we have achieved There have been no striking changes in the 5 year survival data Clinicians tend to see their success in terms of their special interest Radiotherapists point to their success in stage reduction but what are we to do with the many patients whose tumour is unaltered by radiotherapy Urological surgeons and especially those who are still influenced by the shadow of Halsted point to their success in excising the cancer but apart from that highly selected group what are we to do for the very large number of patients for whom surgery is inappropriate Bystanders can only watch and listen to the arguments for and against these views
