Introduction

Today we live in an unprecedentedly dynamic global world. Globalization has intensified our interdependence, and new media engagement has enhanced our interconnectedness. As individuals coming from diverse sociocultural identity backgrounds, we are constantly communicating with each other via face-to-face interactions and many social media connections. In this 21st-century global era, avoiding intercultural interaction or diversity interaction is almost unimaginable. There is also a growing sense of urgency that we develop and enhance intercultural and intergroup communication competence.

With rapid changes in the global economy, technology, transportation, and immigration policies, we find ourselves in increased contact with people who are
