An Assessment of Detecting Mesoscale Rainfall from Mid-latitude Cyclones Using GOES Imagery Data Ronald F. Fournier, 1981 This study examined the capability of current geostationary satellite sensors in resolving and monitoring important mesoscale rain areas Shallow mesoscale precipitation patterns were analyzed with radar and recording rain gage data associated with mid latitude cyclones in New England These cyclones were characterized by relatively little stratiform cloudiness in the upper troposphere Radar thresholding was used to determine the spatial and temporal scales of small mesoscale areas SMSAs large mesoscale areas LMSAs and major echoes Radar rainfall estimates were used to determine the relative amount of rainfall contributed by the mesoscale features Radar analysis of the three cases showed that the spatial scale of major echoes LMSAs and SMSAs were large enough for detection by GOES sensors Major echoes and the LMSAs contained within them were found to have lifetimes that are long relative to the half hour interval between GOES transmissions The duration of some SMSAs and all cells however was on the same order as the time interval between GOES transmissions In addition radar rainfall estimates showed that the major echoes LMSAs and SMSAs were the major contributors to mesoscale rainfall For the cases examined in this study GOES sensors were not capable of distinguishing the individual mesoscale precipitation areas detected by radar Therefore GOES sensors do not appear adequate for developing satellite rainfall estimation techniques to specify shallow mesoscale precipitation

Roadside Revegetation David E. Steinfeld,2007 Native plants are a foundation of ecological function affecting soil conservation wildlife habitat plant communities invasive species and water quality Establishing locally adapted self sustaining plant communities can also support transportation goals for safety and efficiency Past obstacles to establishing native plant communities on roadsides have been technical informational and organizational Effective strategies and practical techniques for revegetating the disturbed conditions with limited resources must be made available to practitioners Multiple disciplines ranging from engineering to soil science ecology botany and wildlife science must be able to work cooperatively not in isolation This report offers an integrated approach to facilitate the successful establishment of native plants along roadsides and other areas of disturbance associated with road modifications It guides readers through a comprehensive process of 1 initiating 2 planning 3 implementing and 4 monitoring a roadside revegetating project with native plants
