From 33-hour cross-Atlantic flight from New York to Paris by Lindbergh in 1927, man had succeeded flying the fastest manned aircraft 40 years later in 1967, known as the North American X-15, which currently holds the official world's fastest speed record of 4,520mph.

HOW AIRPLANES WORK

Airplane (or aeroplane) is a vehicle designed for air travel that weighs more than the air it displaces, which has fixed wings and one or more engines.

One of the most prominent theories in the development of aviation technology is Newton's third law of motion, which suggests that force is created by equal and opposite forces.

The structure of airplane wings is mainly based on spars, ribs, and [sometimes] stringers.

It's cabin pressure fails to stay on the acceptable levels, the first thing you have to do is get on the oxygen mask.

In aircraft landing technology, it takes a combination of brakes, spoilers, and thrust reversers to stop an aircraft from moving.

Airplanes used landing gear to move on the ground both before taking off and landing.

The cabin needs to be pressurized to keep the cabin filled with adequate levels of oxygen.

Airplane wings have an angled upper surface and a flatter lower surface in order to produce lower pressure above the wings and a higher pressure below, which combination keeps the plane up.

Compared to the conventional and tandem landing gear, airplane happens to be the safest, this type of landing gear is suitable for smaller and medium size aircraft from 100 to 100000 lbs weight.
