Changing Identities Reading And Writing Ourselves:

Un-writing Interculturality in Education and Research Fred Dervin, Hamza R'boul, 2024-12-16 This highly original and stimulating edited volume focuses on ways of un writing the polysemous controversial and highly political notion of interculturality in research and education The authors argue that no critical perspective on interculturality can do without revising exploring and creating ways of engaging with different and potentially new aspects and forms of inquiry of the notion in writing They also claim that un writing interculturality can serve an emancipatory function towards an epistemic re appraisal of the mainstream s and the dominant s While critiquing problematic perspectives as well as the taken for granted and things as usual within interculturality scholarship writing about interculturality is epistemically significant and indicative of change in the ways the notion is used Each chapter reflects on how to un write un do and un learn interculturality in research and aims to provide some answers to the following questions What could un writing interculturality mean What are the pros and cons of un writing in research on intercultural communication education and How does constant work on languaging around interculturality contribute to enriching the notion globally The book is aimed at students and scholars who wish to push the boundaries of scholarly engagement with interculturality especially in relation to their modalities of writing reasoning and critiquing

Self-Concept in Foreign Language Learning Reiko Yoshida, 2024-05-06 This book explores self concept in foreign language FL learning tracing the trajectories of a group of Japanese language learners at an Australian university to illuminate new insights about the factors impacting positive self concept and implications for language learning more broadly The volume calls attention to the ways in which learners perception of themselves as FL learners plays a fundamental role in FL learning Drawing on data from a longitudinal study including student diaries interviews and classroom observations Yoshida outlines shifts in self concept as learners progress from secondary school to university courses to study abroad and beyond The book demonstrates how the learner journey is marked by a growing recognition of the importance of practice for achievement but also a greater sense of self consciousness with learners agency in creating opportunities for themselves to practice their FL as a key factor in improving self concept over time This work offers unique observations about self concept for learners who already have global English as a first language inspiring ways forward for future research and language teaching in other under studied languages The book will appeal to students and researchers in applied linguistics SLA and foreign language learning as well as stakeholders in Japanese language programs Language Learning, Power, Race and Identity Liz Johanson Botha,2015 This book investigates the strategies and identities of colonials who have learned the languages of colonised people Using the stories of white South Africans who acquired isiXhosa during the apartheid years this book offers insights into relationships between language power race identity and change Postcolonial Identity and Place Anqi Liu,2018-06-28 Essay from the year 2017 in the subject Sociology Individual Groups Society grade 1 0 Martin Luther University Deutsche Sprache und Literatur course Introduction to Postcolonial Theory Literature and Film language English abstract Postcolonial studies aim at stripping away conventional thoughts and examine what kind of identity emerges in postcolonial subject The first problem when I set out to work on postcolonial literatures is to confirm its scope This word scope that I put forward here can be explained as follows on the one hand postcolonial literature is apparently vague and general It s such a multinational and multicultural case that it is hard to define which country falls under the rubric Except what we always mentioned as postcolonial countries such as Nigeria India and Pakistan some writers include also countries like Canada Ireland and Australia So when we read the literatures about postcolonial it is apparent for us to discover that they include two parts on the one hand it is based on the dominant or colonizer society on the other hand it talks also about the dominated or colonized society On the other hand there are a large number of relevant themes or aspects around the topic postcolonialism migration race gender resistance slavery and so on Trying to cover all the countries and aspects in one essay seems not so specific In my essay I will focus on the question Who am I This kind of doubt about one s identity is a derivative product of colonialism and a very important topic in postcolonial world When we read literatures we are able to seek out what the indigenous voice want to express how should the indigenous people see themselves once their place and identity were forced to change Is the dual identity always ambivalent These questions are what I m going to explain hereinafter Identity, Learning, and Decision Making in Changing Organizations Charles R. Schwenk,2002 The relationship between self concepts identities and crucial decisions in a business environment Having noticed that people s views of major business related issues are rooted in their personal identities the author describes how to conceptualize the self and manage people to achieve collective action

The making of black female revolutionaries - growing consciousness and change of identity in the autobiographies of Assata Shakur and Elaine Brown Jessica Menz,2008-06-02 Bachelor Thesis from the year 2006 in the subject American Studies Literature grade 1 15 University of Bayreuth language English abstract In this thesis I will first briefly outline general aspects of the autobiographical genre with emphasis on the tradition of life narratives written by African Americans. As this thesis focuses on two autobiographies written by women, I will also go into major characteristic aspects that distinguish their personal accounts from men's before introducing the autobiographies of Assata Shakur and Elaine Brown within the larger context. Chapter three will be dedicated to a closer look on their works. I will focus on Shakur's and Brown's representations of themselves as black women and their becoming revolutionaries within the dynamics of gender and power. I will illustrate important aspects of their identity formation during childhood and adolescence, e.g. family backgrounds, school education, ghetto life, and their relationship to male age mates, as well as their slow process of identity change due to growing critical awareness and introduction to the Black Power Movement. I will also focus on whether and if yes, how their current identity is again challenged within the Black Power Movement and especially within and outside of the Black Panther Party. Lastly, I will shortly concentrate on the autobiographies' respective closures and how the two women see themselves directly after leaving organized struggle behind. Brown or from exile several years later, Shakur. By writing their autobiographies, Brown and Shakur take advantage of the opportunity to tell their version of the story. How the two women create their identity and depict themselves retrospectively as being quite different from their public image will be the central focus of this paper.

When Writers Read Jane Hansen, 2001. When writers read, they evaluate all the time. They can't help it. But they can become better at it, and that's what this second edition of When Writers Read is about: what students can do to become better evaluators of themselves as writers and readers, and how you can help. Extensively revised, the second edition is organized around five concepts that are central to an effective writing/reading program: Voices. When writers read, they listen for a strong author voice; they know they can hear their own when they write, and assume other authors' voices come through as well. It's essential that all voices, both those of students and professional writers, be honored and supported by an evaluation system dedicated to this notion. Decisions. When writers read, they make decisions, so it's only natural that they look for evidence of the decisions other authors make. To become effective writers and readers, students must learn to make decisions about which types of writing to create, what to write and read about, where to work, when to do so, whom to share their work with, and what to do to become better writers and readers. Time. When writers read, they read and read and read. One of your primary responsibilities as their teacher is to provide plenty of opportunities for them to do so and create an overall framework in which students spend their time wisely. Response. When writers read, they look for a message. Students need to understand that to respond effectively to other writers, they should listen closely and think appreciatively and critically about the author. Self-discipline. When writers read, it's their self-discipline that keeps them engaged. By providing plenty of good books, writing possibilities, and self-evaluation opportunities, you can help ensure your students are self-disciplined and eager.

Reading for Change Gill Rye, 2001. How does reading literature change our life? How does it change the way we see each other In what ways can reading impact on who we are and what we will become Drawing creatively on major theorists from French and Anglo American feminisms through psychoanalysis sociology and psychology to contemporary literary theory the author articulates reading as a process of change Relations between text and reader individual and collective identities self and other are thought through in a sustained development of a politics of reading based on the model of the dialogue Without losing sight of diversity and subjectivity in reading this book explores the transformative potential of literature through themes of loss maternity and difference in original readings of some post 1980 French fiction Anglophone readers are introduced to the rich oeuvre of Christiane Baroche and to the accessible yet thought provoking novels of Paule Constant winner of the 1998 prix Goncourt as well as to new critical analyses of Hélène Cixous's later fictions

Writing and Sense of Self Robert Brooke, 1991 Drawing on findings from psychology anthropology and sociology this book examines motivation for writing and connects writing with the roles each person plays in the family the workplace and in social and cultural groups including school and with the lifelong search for potential new roles As a blueprint for changing the writing of college students the book offers portraits of four types of writing classes and discusses rationales teacher roles assignments day to day classroom practices student behaviors and outcomes The book presents the perceptions concerns and thought processes of writing teachers from a practitioner's point of view as well as findings from student interviews conducted outside of class It is the thesis of the book that the new roles for students that emerge from a writer centered workshop can change the way students learn from passive absorption toward an ability to use experience to change their own lives and those of their communities KEH

Changing Identities of Chinese Women Elisabeth Croll, 1995 Describes the changing reality of women's lives during the China's republican revolutionary and reform eras Media, Education, and Change Lesley L. Johnson, 2001 Lesley L. Johnson's research has been enthusiastically received both in the United States and abroad as a unique discourse focused on the application of reader response theory intermodal expressive therapy models and technology within contemporary media education paradigms as they influence educational change Johnson demonstrates how change in self concept and teaching and learning practices occurs when teachers and students become involved with media education specifically self analysis through practical learning experiences

Literacies and Technologies Robert Yagelski, 2000 Literacies and Technologies welcomes students into the world of critical thinking and college level writing This reader encourages students to explore the relationship between literacy and technology and the implications of that relationship on their culture and on their own lives at a time of rapid social and technological change This reader is intended to help foster a reflective and critical perspective on literacy and to facilitate students development as effective and informed writers and readers
