Nonverbal Communication in Virtual Worlds Theresa Jean Tanenbaum, Michael Nixon, Magy Seif El-Nasr, 2021-01-25 Over the last 20 years there has been an expansion of network mediated social activities and an accompanying explosion of research interest into the poetics of networked communication Of particular interest is the rise of what have come to be known as virtual worlds persistent graphical environments populated and often partially authored by large communities of individual users Interactors in these worlds are embodied as avatars digital puppets or representations through which the user exerts his or her will on the environment It is this virtual embodiment that makes today's virtual worlds so interesting With virtual embodiment comes a host of new and important communicative possibilities and an assortment of new challenges and literacies including a wide range of nonverbal communication behaviors and non linguistic social signaling options In this book we begin the work of articulating the challenges and possibilities for non verbal communication in virtual worlds Drawing on a wide range of disciplines and perspectives we consider the past present and future of human communication online See Video Figures referenced in the text

Using a Physical Metaphor to Scale Up Communication in Virtual Worlds Daniel Reiter Horn, 2011 This dissertation argues that application level messaging in virtual worlds must have five properties to enable scalability while avoiding the undesirable limitations of existing systems recipient selection minimum quality of service graceful degradation fine grained multiplexing and high utilization To address these issues the Sirikata system architecture a new virtual world back end system was developed that achieves these five properties Sirikata's key insight is to leverage the geometric nature of virtual worlds by applying a physical metaphor to communication Object communication follows an inverse square law behaving similarly to point source radio transmitters and receivers The theoretical scalability results are proven and some valid approximations are investigated Then an implementation of a message forwarder that supports a large number of objects and prioritizes traffic using such an inverse square falloff is introduced Evaluations of Sirikata show that it satisfies the stated requirements performs better than current virtual worlds and can closely follow the real world radio communication analogy Finally a range of sample application demonstrates the effectiveness of this approach Each sample application is coded in the world and studied when the system is loaded

Thalmann, The Social Life of Avatars Ralph Schroeder, 2001-12-11 Virtual reality VR technology has been developed commercially since the early 1990s 1 Yet it is only with the growth of the Internet and other high bandwidth links that VR systems have increasingly become networked to allow users to share the same virtual environment VE Shared YEs raise a number of interesting questions what is the difference between face to face interaction and interaction between persons inside YEs How does the appearance of the avatar as the graphical
