The Power of Nonverbal Communication Henry H. Calero, 2005 Anyone who can successfully read people can communicate and hold power The Use of Verbal and Nonverbal Cues in Computer-Mediated Communication: When and Why? Monica Ann Schepers Riordan, 2011 Research in face to face communication indicates that nonverbal cues such as facial expression prosody and gesture are significant for interpreting the emotional content of a message The lack of these nonverbal cues in computer mediated communication CMC suggests a high possibility of miscommunication However recent research shows that interlocutors using CMC adapt to the lack of visual and vocal cues in the channel and are able to express themselves with the use of text based nonverbal cues and word choice Yet the manner in which many nonverbal cues are used in computer mediated communication is still unknown as is the relationship between nonverbal and verbal cues in text only environments In the studies reported here the relationship between emotion expression and nonverbal cues such as emoticons asterisks and repeating exclamation points in CMC composition and interpretation is examined Borrowing from semiotic theory cues are grouped as iconic i e physically resembling their implication such as for a smiling face indexical i e indirectly connected to their implications such as for an exaggerated exclamation and symbolic i e implications must be learned such as asterisks for prosodic change Nonverbal cues are also examined in the light of communication other than emotion expression such as clarifying a message or giving perspective In a series of eight experiments involving surveys email generation email and listserv post interpretation and transcription participants indicate that nonverbal cues are closely intertwined in meaning to verbal cues that is the type of nonverbal cue being used carries specific interpretations and the verbal content of the message allows a reader to choose from among the possible implications Nonverbal cues are principally used to signal emotion and emphasize verbal content and are strongly related to prosody in speech The communication goals that nonverbal cues fulfill are strongly related to their semiotic group However there is a discrepancy between what the writer intends when using nonverbal cues and what the reader interprets upon seeing the nonverbal cues These results are discussed in the context of several assumptions about nonverbal cues made in prior research including that of research on emoticons and additive effects of nonverbal cues
