

Chiral Allenes and Chiral Axes

- In allenes an sp-hybridized central carbon forms pi bonds with each of the two adjacent carbons
- The two pi-bonds are oriented 90° relative to each other
- If any of the end carbons on the allene are bonded to two identical substituents the allene will have a plane of symmetry and be achiral.

- at least one end of the allene has two identical substituents

- However, if both of the end carbons are bonded to two different substituents, the allene will lack a plane of symmetry and therefore be chiral

- neither end of the allene has two identical substituents

- This is known as axial chirality and is similar to the chirality exhibited by left- and right-handed screws.
