Beyond Recognition Le Minh-Ha, 2024-05-06 This thesis addresses the need to balance the use of facial recognition systems with the need to protect personal privacy in machine learning and biometric identification As advances in deep learning accelerate their evolution facial recognition systems enhance security capabilities but also risk invading personal privacy Our research identifies and addresses critical vulnerabilities inherent in facial recognition systems and proposes innovative privacy enhancing technologies that anonymize facial data while maintaining its utility for legitimate applications Our investigation centers on the development of methodologies and frameworks that achieve k anonymity in facial datasets leverage identity disentanglement to facilitate anonymization exploit the vulnerabilities of facial recognition systems to underscore their limitations and implement practical defenses against unauthorized recognition systems We introduce novel contributions such as AnonFACES StyleID IdDecoder StyleAdv and DiffPrivate each designed to protect facial privacy through advanced adversarial machine learning techniques and generative models These solutions not only demonstrate the feasibility of protecting facial privacy in an increasingly surveilled world but also highlight the ongoing need for robust countermeasures against the ever evolving capabilities of facial recognition technology Continuous innovation in privacy enhancing technologies is required to safeguard individuals from the pervasive reach of digital surveillance and protect their fundamental right to privacy By providing open source publicly available tools and frameworks this thesis contributes to the collective effort to ensure that advancements in facial recognition serve the public good without compromising individual rights Our multi disciplinary approach bridges the gap between biometric systems adversarial machine learning and generative modeling to pave the way for future research in the domain and support AI innovation where technological advancement and privacy are balanced

Beyond Recognition Laura Jane Collins, 2026-01-15 Beyond Recognition offers a groundbreaking rhetorical analysis of transgender antidiscrimination law revealing how legal actors advocates and critics alike are driven by a cultural desire for certainty in sex Drawing from landmark cases and legislative debates Laura Jane Collins reframes these legal struggles not as efforts to resolve identity but as reflections of our collective anxieties about recognition power and the instability of legal meaning
