reasonable objections The principle and the practice are so intimately connected in people s minds that they are almost sure to stand and fall together so that if there is any great defect in the practice there is danger of the principle being made to bear the blame of it and if the practice is such as to give reasonable dissatisfaction to reasonable men it is almost sure to weaken the hold which the principle has on the public mind On these grounds I am anxious to call the attention of those Churchmen who believe in the importance of the principle of Subscription to the practice as at present imposed by the Act of Uniformity on the beneficed clergymen of the Church of England and I do so under the very strong conviction that in order to maintain the principle and I might almost add on every other ground there should be an united endeavour amongst English Churchmen without delay to effect a change
