

Caring for the Animals

This is a major zoo in a capital city. We are looking down at it through the window of the animal surgery. The window in the surgery is very big because the vets believe that light helps the sick animals to recover. On the left, there is a vet. She is examining a puppy. She also has some cats, rabbits and tiger cubs to examine. A parrot is waiting for attention. He has a sore beak. On the left, behind the vet, there are tanks for sick and recovering reptiles and fish. To the right, there is a poster of butterflies. Above the window, there are diagrams, with information, of birds and sea animals. As well as a zoo for wild animals, there is a section of domestic and farm animals, including sheep, cows, pigs, goats and donkeys. The children love to play with them. On the right, there is a veterinary nurse. She is feeding a tiger cub. The mother tiger has an infection. It is not serious and she will be well soon. The zoo has huge enclosures and the animals are treated very well. There is also an important conservation programme. Those three tiger cubs are very precious!
