Business 2.0, 2001-08 Dispersion of Meaning Matko Meštrović, 2008 This book presents interdisciplinary research in the social sciences and humanities by connecting seemingly disparate sources through a sensitivity to endangered human values It links reflections on the contemporary relationship between art and technology in a post modern context seeing art in terms of crossing boundaries and exploring virtuality It deals with the consequences of economics colonising other disciplines in terms of the processes by which the social becomes the economic Using Jantsch's evolutionary paradigm the concept of self transcendence is seen as crucial for the understanding of human beings and their social systems

Incorporating recent thinking from the natural sciences the learning process can be conceived as the life and activity of all complex systems including those once conceived as organisms machines cultures or economies Without the societal embrace of scientific and technological development no collective or individual meaning can be assigned to the production of new knowledge The book seeks to recognise the point where a collective learning process becomes the heart of productivity and where the shift from the hegemony of material labour to immaterial labour becomes fundamental The author brings new understandings of art the social and technology together based on the idea that history is not a story told in separate physical social and spiritual spaces and that the most fundamental problem of today is how to find some shared meaning in a fractured world

The author analyses at a global level the process of the co production of scientific and social order of culture and technology of life sciences and economic and political regimes It rightly identifies the rise of the role of knowledge and the move of capital into life sciences as a new stage in the history of capitalism what we can qualify as cognitive capitalism or biocapitalism In this new era of capitalism what is being manufactured and sold are not just tangible and non tangible goods whose increasing importance as the author shows poses unsurmountable theoretical problems to the theoretical apparatus of economic science The increasing mercantilisation of the world appears at the same time as a bio power i e a set of instruments creating and controlling different forms of life forms of communication standards of socialisation education the individual and collective imaginary etc More fundamentally the encounter of life sciences and the information technology integrates and subjects the most essential mechanisms of biological and social reproduction to the logic of capital valorization To understand the complexity of these changes and the ethical and philosophical questions that the development of technology and sciences poses to the future of mankind one must break through the disciplinary barriers delineating different disciplines in social sciences and those separating social sciences from natural sciences Professor Matko Mestrovic manages to tackle this challenge not only because of his impressive and masterful knowledge of different disciplines in the social and natural sciences but he does it also owing to his capacity for theoretical elaboration that allows him to lay the foundations of a new transdisciplinary paradigm This is why his work can raise the awareness of the general public on two issues on a global and profound vision of the challenges posed by the new millennium and on the need for a radical theoretical innovation bringing into question the disciplinary certitudes in develop a social science able to better understand the movement and the ambiguity of history

Carlo Vercellone Universit c de Paris 1 Panth c on Sorbonne oeMe trovi provides a unique insight into the often forgotten relation between economics on the one hand and arts and culture on the other demonstrating that these zdomains oe function as a total social facticity and not as separate entirely independent elements thereof In doing so he is dispelling the illusions about the disciplinary self containdness of individual forms of knowledge and is relying on those paradigms of contemporary scientific thought whose zepistemological programs oe are based on close cooperation and zopening up oe and not on the persuasion about one s own positions and dispositions Prof dr
