Ecosystem Service: Fighting Soil Erosion

Location: Midwest, US

SCAN

Problem

Soil erosion has become a major challenge in the U.S. Midwest, an area known as the nation's agricultural heartland. Erosion strips away the nutrient-rich topsoil that crops need to grow, reducing farm productivity and contributing to water pollution as sediments wash into rivers and lakes. Heavy rainfall, wind, and unsustainable farming practices have worsened the problem over the years. Two possible solutions to fight soil erosion in the Midwest are Cover Cropping & Terracing.

Location of Midwest

The Midwest is known as one of the most productive agricultural regions in the United States. It primarily grows crops such as corn, soybeans, and wheat. Corn and soybeans are especially important, with the Midwest sometimes referred to as "Corn Belt" due to its large corn production.

Solution 1: Cover Cropping

Cover cropping is a farming practice where farmers plant crops specifically to protect and improve the soil, rather than to harvest for profit. These cover crops, like clover, rye, or alfalfa, help prevent soil erosion, add nutrients back into the soil, and improve water retention. They are usually planted during times when the main crops, like corn or soybeans, are not growing. Cover crops can also help suppress weeds and reduce the need for chemical fertilizers. This practice is important for maintaining healthy, sustainable farmland.

Ecosystem Service: Fighting Soil Erosion

Problem & Location

Terracing is a farming method used on hills or sloped land to reduce soil erosion and water runoff. It involves creating flat, step-like sections, or "terraces," along the slope. Each terrace acts like a small platform that helps slow down water flow and traps soil that might otherwise wash away. By doing this, terracing allows farmers to cultivate crops on steep slopes while preserving the soil and preventing erosion. This practice is commonly used in areas with significant elevation, such as in mountainous regions.

Comparative Solution Comparison

Criteria	Cover Cropping	Terracing
Scientific Considerations	Planting cover crops like clover or rye during the off-season helps prevent soil from being exposed to wind and rain, reducing erosion.	Creating terraces, or step-like ridges, along slopes slows down water runoff and prevents soil from being washed away.
Economic Considerations	Relatively low cost to plant and maintain but requires planning and the right crop rotation.	High upfront costs for installation but saves money in the long run by preserving topsoil and preventing runoff.
Social Considerations	Improves soil health and can boost crop yields over time, but requires farmers to adopt new planting practices.	More visible impact, reduces soil loss significantly, but needs cooperation from farmers to change land management.
Advantages	Low cost, improves soil structure and fertility, reduces water runoff and erosion.	Very effective on sloped land, prevents soil from being washed away, greatly reduces erosion in hilly areas.
Disadvantages	Requires consistent planting and careful management, results may take time to show.	Expensive to install, may not be suitable for flatlands, requires significant land modification.

Competing By Design:

Competing by Design David Nadler, Michael Tushman, 1997-07-10 As companies are coming to realize they can't compete successfully in the 21st century with organizations based on 19th century ideas Competing by Design shows clearly and persuasively why and most importantly how to harness the power of organizational architecture to unleash the competitive strengths embedded in each organization

Competing by Design Michael Tushman, If the defining goal of modern day business can be isolated to just one item it would be the search for competitive advantage And as everyone in business knows it's a lot harder than it used to be On the one hand competition is more intense than ever technological innovation consumer expectations government deregulation all combine to create more opportunities for new competitors to change the basic rules of the game On the other hand most of the old reliable sources of competitive advantage are drying up the hallowed strategies employed by GM IBM and AT T to maintain their seemingly unassailable positions of dominance in the 1960s and 70s are as obsolete as the calvary charge So in this volatile unstable environment where can competitive advantage be found As David Nadler and Michael Tushman show the last remaining source of truly sustainable competitive advantage lies in organizational capabilities the unique ways each organization structures its work and motivates its people to achieve clearly articulated strategic objectives For too long too many managers have thought about organization merely in terms of rearranging the boxes and lines on an organizational chart but as Competing by Design clearly illustrates organizational strength is found far beyond one dimensional diagrams Managers must argue Nadler and Tushman understand the concepts and learn the skills involved in designing their organization to exploit their inherent strengths All the reengineering restructuring and downsizing in the world will merely destabilize a company if the change doesn't address the fundamental patterns of performance and if the change doesn't recognize the unique core competencies of that company In this landmark volume the authors draw upon specific cases to illustrate the design process in practice as they provide a set of powerful yet simple tools for using strategic organization design to gain competitive advantage They present a design process explore key decisions managers face and list the guiding principles for incorporating the design function as a continuing and integral process in organizations that are looking to the future In 1918 Henry Ford's Dearborn assembly plant was the model of the new assembly line technology Today the assembly plant is an aging relic but incredibly the organizational architecture it spawned lives on in steep hierarchies centralized bureaucracies and narrowly defined jobs As companies are coming to realize they can't compete successfully in the 21st century with organizations based on 19th century ideas Competing by Design shows clearly and persuasively why and most importantly how to harness the power of organizational architecture to unleash the competitive strengths embedded in each organization
