A Baseline Study on the Magnitude of Abortion Among Women of Child-bearing Age in

Lesotho ,2003 The Global Politics of Abortion Jodi L. Jacobson,1990 Locating the issue of abortion in a global public policy context with the array of public health human rights and social questions that are implicated is the aim of this paper Abortion laws around the world have been liberalized since the 1950s with a resultant decrease in abortion related mortality among women The proportion of the world s population governed by laws that permit abortion on medical or broader social and economic grounds is 75 percent nearly 4 billion people In addition to women living in those countries that have resisted liberalization of their abortion laws many women have restricted access to abortion even those in countries in which abortion is technically legal There are a number of reasons for this including a lack of government or public commitment to provide or fund services lack of trained specialists administrative roadblocks a woman s ability to pay and a lack of truthful information about legal rights and services Abortion rates from countries around the world are examined and discussed in terms of the varying demographic and social realities The large number of maternal deaths due to abortion that still occur is not due to a deficiency in technology but a deficiency in the value placed on women s lives The numerous roadblocks to safe abortion services drive women to seek illegal or clandestine abortions that greatly endanger their lives The debate surrounding abortion has been too often portrayed as a conflict between black and white hues The debate needs to take place in a larger context complete with public health family planning and human rights concerns Equality of political rights for women and likely the lives of many hinges on political decisions regarding abortion DB The Potential Role of Contraception in Reducing Abortion John Bongaarts,Charles F. Westoff,2000 Population Policies and Programmes United Nations Population Fund,1991 In the last 200 years the world s population has increased five fold from one billion in 1800 to over five billion today Every day that figure increases by over 200 000 In 30 years our planet will be home to a staggering eight billion people implementation in most developing countries of population policies and programmes research and training activities international national and regional conferences and censuses and demographic surveys geared to resolving this urgent dilemma In this definitive volume the United Nations Population Fund UNFPA provides a comprehensive distillation of the information assembled by a diverse population taskforce A valuable resource to anyone interested in population policy the work assesses the accomplishments of two decades worth of research and implementation and provides a plethora of prescriptive guidelines Most significantly it identifies broad base for joint programming and interagency cooperation so that resources can be more effectively mobilized at the global national and regional levels Population Reports ,1980
