

St Brigid's Cross

In the eve of St Brigid's Day, family members would gather outside from the fields to make St Brigid's Crosses. Often a girl in the youngest member of the family would collect the grass stalks. Then, the whole family would gather together to make crosses. Crosses were then left on the doorstep for St Brigid to bless as she passed by the house that night. The cross would be hung above the door to keep the house and its occupants safe for another year. Crosses were also made for horses, cattle and chickens, as Brigid was a friend and protector of animals, especially cattle. There were many different variations of the St Brigid's cross, but probably the most famous is the four-legged cross with a central square, woven from reeds.

The original St Brigid's Cross was made of reeds. Today, many children learn to make crosses in school and these are often blessed with holy water by the local priest.

Brigid's Braid

In the night before St Brigid's Day, each family would place a piece of straw or a ribbon called the Brigid's braid on the tablecloth or bench of a room for the year to come, so the household would be protected. The date or piece of straw was believed to have healing properties and was used for many ailments and illnesses.

St Brigid's Day Traditions

Brigid

In some parts of Ireland, a 'briddy' was made from reeds or straw. This doll was wrapped in a white cloth. Men or children would bring this doll from house to house looking for straw, but in evening they were usually disposed of straw or old clothes. They would often say a prayer.

Four-Brigid

In the west of Ireland, people sometimes carried a long straw braid called a 'Four-Brigid'. By giving it over their heads, people hoped to give St Brigid's protection and blessing for another year.

St Brigid's Feast

There are many holy wells throughout Ireland dedicated to St Brigid. The water in these wells is thought to be blessed and particularly potent on the eve of St Brigid's Day. Many people and their cattle go up to the water and to receive its healing properties.

Traditions

Prayers

On Brigid's Day, it was a custom to say a prayer for the sick and the poor. They often said: 'Mary of the Cross, be the good and virtuous patroness of my soul'.

Games

There were many games played on St Brigid's Day. One of the most popular was 'Brigid's Game'. It was a game of chance, and the winner would receive a reward. The game was played on a board with a cross on it. The winner would receive a reward, and the loser would receive a punishment.

St Brigid's Day Traditions

Saint Brigid's Day is celebrated each year on 1st February. St Brigid is one of the patron saints of Ireland and from February 2023, a national holiday will be introduced to commemorate and celebrate her life.

What's in a name?

Saint Brigid is also spelt as Bridget, Bríd, or Bríde. In Irish, the feast day is known as Lá Fhéile Bríde. Brigid was also called 'Maire na n-Éire', which means 'Mary of the Irish'. She was given this name as she was held in high esteem and veneration by the Irish people and worshipped only second to Mary, the mother of Jesus.

'Imbolc' and Spring

'Imbolc' was a Pagan or Celtic festival in Ireland in the past. It was also celebrated on 1st February, which is considered to be the first day of spring. 'Imbolc' was a very important day for our Celtic ancestors as it signified the end of the long, cold, dark winter and welcomed the new season. 'Imbolc' celebrated new life and warmth.

'Brigid' the goddess

The feast of St Brigid was celebrated with a festival called 'Brigid's Festival'. It was one of the Tuatha Dé Danann and said to be the
