Edna Henry Turpin

Come Spring:

Whatever It Takes May Davidson, 2019-06-20 May and Jim Davidson spent sixty eight years together sharing an unbreakable love of Maine and a relentless drive to do whatever it takes to find success and happiness After falling in love as teenagers they built their first house using twenty dollars worth of lumber and optimistically started creating the life of their dreams However they soon learned that optimism alone wouldn't sustain them They lobstered fished farmed sheep started a lobster trap sawmill and criss crossed the country as long haul truckers And when they eventually collapsed into debt and uncertainty while trying to raise thousands of chickens they regrouped and fought their way out again by developing a unique gift product inspired by the sea May Davidson's story is a decades long tapestry of adventure brutally hard work light heartedness and risk taking It offers a wider view of Maine during the last half of the twentieth century a shared history between the farmers lobstermen truckers and entrepreneurs who have witnessed tremendous change in their lifetimes It's a familiar tale to every reader who is determined to live a rich life despite obstacles a story of the hard work and moxie that's required to pursue a happy life
