

Coping can further be thought of in four broad categories:

Problem-focused coping, which directly addresses the stressor. For example, a person might practice acceptance to cope with uncertainty.

Emotion-focused coping, which addresses the challenging emotion that arises in response to the stressor. An example of this is making a joke about your heartbreak.

Meaning-focused coping, which harnesses cognitive strategies to find meaning beneath the stressor. For example, if a person doesn't get into the program they applied for, they may recognize a silver lining, such as not having to move.

Social coping, which involves seeking support from others. Think about a time when you were feeling down and reached out to a friend – that's social coping.

Self-made Women Diane Jennings, 1987 Despite having emerged in the heyday of a dominant Europe of which Ancient Greece is the hallowed spiritual and intellectual ancestor anthropology has paradoxically shown relatively little interest in contemporary Greek culture In this innovative and ambitious book Michael Herzfeld moves Greek Ethnography from the margins to the centre of anthropological theory revealing the theoretical insights that can be gained by so doing He shows that the ideology that originally led to the creation of anthropology also played a large part in the growth of the modern Greek nation state and that Greek ethnography can therefore serve as a mirror for an ethnography of anthropology itself He further demonstrates the role that scholarly fields including anthropology have played in the construction of contemporary Greek culture and Greek identity The Bulletin, 1981

The Influence of Instructional Set on Self-reports of Coping Strategies Kathryn Ann Baker, 1999 Lazarus and Folkman have encouraged researchers to modify the instructions of the Ways of Coping Questionnaire WOC to meet the specific aims of their studies Little attention has been paid to the influence that modifications to the WOC instructions may have on reports of coping choice This study investigated the influence of instructional set on self reports of coping strategies among 168 college undergraduates Participants were randomly assigned to one of three coping prompt conditions which emphasized specific forms of coping such as solving problems managing emotions or a neutral prompt which emphasized multifaceted coping Participants were asked to complete the WOC twice once in response to exam stress and once in response to interpersonal conflict stress Ratings of perceived stressfulness and perceived controllability differed significantly across stressor types Interpersonal conflict stress was rated significantly more stressful and less controllable than exam stress With the influence of perceived controllability and perceived stressfulness controlled interpersonal conflict stress was related to greater reports of coping though both emotion focused and problem focused strategies Exam stress was related to greater reports of coping through playful problem solving strategies Coping prompts made independent contributions to reports of seeking social support strategies and interacted with stressor type to influence reports of accepting responsibility and escape avoidance strategies
