

Decision Models for Management Course Exercises

Topic: Business | Words: 949 | Pages: 3

Abstract

Self-assessments allowed students to understand what strengths and weaknesses they have. This is necessary in order to get to know themselves more deeply, as well as to assess how effective they will be in their work. Specifically, me, the exercises helped to pay more focused attention to how significant my weaknesses are for future work. In addition, now I know exactly what strengths are inherent in me and that they need to be improved and strengthened.

Summary

Even though the training was built in a non-standard way because the coronavirus pandemic hurt the educational process, each of us had the opportunity to evaluate our strengths and weaknesses and outline an action plan to strengthen our advantages and overcome our shortcomings. Due to the exercises I went through; I realized what exactly I need to work on and what to change to find a worthwhile place for myself in my future. According to the test results, I belong to the category of theory X people. According to Touma (2021), people who correspond to theory X, are initiative-free, are not ready for responsibility and do not like to work. In addition, I realized that I did not have enough knowledge about myself, but the exercises I completed allowed me to understand myself more deeply.
