over the Soviet armed forces has been tenuous since Stalin's death the relationship was inherently unstable and conflictual growing in intensity because of Gorbachev and his approach to domestic and foreign policy reforms The source of this instability lay in the creation of the Soviet Armed Forces as a Marxist military and Nichols maintains that this privileged and highly ideological institution found itself in frequent conflict with a Party that had of necessity to take an increasingly pragmatic approach to international politics Movement toward a politically isolated and professionalized military he shows was continuously subverted by civilian leaders who sought to control military issues through political intrusions into doctrine and strategy He concludes that the new leaders of the post Soviet republics have inherited a group of military organizations that continue to resist the abandonment both of their ideological foundations and of their cohesion as a multinational military a situation he believes may prove to be one of the greatest threats to the emerging post Soviet democracies The
