Olivier Pascalis,^{1*} Xavier de Martin de Viviés,² Gizelle Anzures,³ Paul C. Quinn,⁴ Alan M. Slater,⁵ James W. Tanaka⁶ and Kang Lee^{3*}

This article reviews the development of the face-processing system from birth, during infancy and through childhood, until it becomes the sophisticated system observed in adults. We begin by discussing the following major theoretical issues concerning the development of face expertise: (1) nature versus nurture or the role of experience in face processing, (2) level of processing (i.e., global, basic, subordinate, individual) and expertise, and (3) type of processing (i.e., holistic, configural, featural). This general overview will be followed by a closer examination of individual studies that investigate the development of face processing. These studies will include a review of (1) development of differential processing of faces and objects, (2) development of differential processing of faces of different species, (3) developmental changes in processing facial identity, and (4) developmental changes in the categorization of faces. Our review of the developmental literature reveals early competence in face-processing abilities with infants presenting a preference for face stimuli and facial discrimination using featural, configural, and holistic cues. This early competence is then later refined as evidenced by age-related changes throughout childhood. Some of the refinements are likely due to the development of general cognitive abilities, whereas some others may be face-specific. © 2011 John Wiley & Sons, Ltd. WIREs Cogn Sci 2011, 2: 666–675 DOI: 10.1002/wcs.146

INTRODUCTION

Recognition of individuals at first sight is extremely important for social species such as human and nonhuman primates. An individual's decision to fight, flee, mate, cooperate, or seek protection often depends on the outcome of such recognition. If some species recognize individuals using olfaction or audition,¹ primates will primarily do it via their visual system, using faces. Although it is still controversial as to whether humans' superior face-processing abilities reflect an innate, specialized face-processing mechanism, or a more general phenomenon of visual learning due to massive exposure to faces,^{2–5} most researchers agree that (1) adults are experts in face processing and (2) adults' ability to process faces is tuned by their experience.

Faces are multidimensional visual stimuli, providing a broad range of information to an observer.⁶ This information can be organized into two major categories: face traits and face states. Face traits refer to the visual information in the face that is relatively permanent and stable. These traits include: facedness (face or non-face), species (e.g., humans or dogs), gender (male or female), race (e.g., Chinese or Caucasian), aesthetics (attractive or unattractive), age (old or young), and identity (e.g., John or Mary). Face states refer to dynamic and transient facial cues. Face-state information is used to process speech (e.g., the McGurk effect), emotional expressions, attention, and intentions.⁷ Exactly which components of the face-processing system are present at birth, which develop first, and at what stage the system becomes adult-like are still hotly debated topics. However, we will not talk about face states here.

Viewing a face triggers at least two automatic and fast processes: categorization of the stimulus
