

Week 2: Comparing democracies I: majoritarian versus consensus democracy

Differing approaches to comparing democracies

- Almond (1956)— wanted to classify systems around the world, identified three types of political systems.
 1. Anglo-american : political culture was secular and homogenous, moderate, stable, centralised.
 2. Continental : political culture was fragmented, had perspectives that weren't compatible. Unstable and polarised.
 3. Scandinavian
- Lijphart (1980) — built on Almond's work but challenged it. Majoritarian vs Consensus democracies. Lijphart had Ten Core Differences.

Majoritarian vs Consensus Democracies

- Majoritarian: "government by the majority of the people." winning parties or coalition could exercise basically limitless power in the political system, executive authority not really constrained. Winner takes all type beat.
- Consensus: power more likely to be shared rather than contested, minorities formally included in decision making processes. Executive power limited by constitutional courts, decentralised system of territorial governance. IT's not fair to let one group govern all the shit

Lijphart's Patterns of Democracy

- Executive Parties dimension : primarily considers developments within the electoral, party and government systems. 1-5
- Federal Unitary dimension : mainly addresses specific features concerning composition of state. 6-10

Ten Core Differences between these democracies

1. Concentration of executive power in one-party and bare-majority cabinets vs executive power sharing in broad multiparty coalitions - consensus is latter
2. cabinet dominance vs executive-legislative balance of power - cabinet is supposed to be dependent on the confidence of the legislature, but really cabinet is made up of leaders from the parliament, consensus has formal separation of powers
3. Two-party system vs multiparty systems - consensus is latter, not just left-right systems
4. Majoritarian and disproportional system of elections vs proportional representation - so like FPTP, elected in single member districts according to plurality, consensus is PR
