

Social Legislation and Role of Social Worker in Legal Assistance

* Dr. Anurag Singh

Introduction

The Indian Constitution provides equal protection of laws to all citizens. By implication, they are should not only have just laws, but also see that they are justly administered and implemented. With the lapse of the last one or of two decades for the past and the modern nations, however, in the interest of justice and equity, a number of special laws and special measures are taken to protect those vulnerable and marginalized sections and one such measure is the enactment of special laws which specifically aim at social justice which are collectively called as social legislation.

As a consequence of various biological, economic, social and political factors personal and social development take place in different forms in our society. In order to cater the requirements of all these sections, these individuals, groups and institutions need special approaches, programmes and measures and legislations in case of such approach. We have specific legislations for care, protection and treatment of mentally ill, juvenile and minor children, sexual and exploitation of begging, welfare workers for
