

A CHRISTIAN APPROACH TO PHILOSOPHY

PAUL ANDREW BOURNE^{}, DEVON CROSSFIELD^{}, VIVIAN NICHOLAS^{*}

A philosophy of life guides our actions and behavior as we go through life. Our belief about truth, reality, and value determines our perceptions of the world and the universe. Our response to questions about anthropology determines our relationship with students and people in general. The way we treat students and our beliefs about theological issues also determines our perception of what knowledge is of most worth to be included in the curriculum.

Knight [2] suggests that even a cursory glance at basic metaphysical issues reveals their importance for every educational practice. He further opined that it is crucial that every educational program be based upon fact and reality rather than fancy, illusion, or imagination. Schools programs, treatment of disciplinary matters and teachers' instructional methods will differ dramatically, depending on how they view each student.

Metaphysics deal with the nature of reality. Thus, many churches spend millions of dollars each year transferring certain values to students because of their metaphysical beliefs regarding the nature of ultimate reality, the existence of God, and the role of God in human beings as God's children. Metaphysics is a major determinant of everything we as teachers do in the classroom.

Another branch of philosophy that is closely related to metaphysics that stands at the center of the education process is the issue of epistemology. Epistemology seeks to shine the spotlight on the nature, sources and validity of knowledge through which we gain information. Since both educational systems and teachers in every education system deal in knowledge; they are engaged in an epistemological undertaking.

Knight [2] claims that "epistemology has a direct impact upon education on a moment-by-moment basis". This impact, he further suggests, will give rise to assumptions about the importance of the various sources of knowledge which will certainly be reflected in curricular emphases and teaching methodologies.

Due to the fact that Christian teachers believe in revelation as a source of certain knowledge, they will undoubtedly choose a curriculum and a central biblical role in that curriculum that differ substantially from curricular choices of secular school teachers. It is true for educators of all philosophic persuasions, that their entire philosophic worldview will color the presentation of every topic they teach.

Our belief about reality and truth as educators will lead us to assumptions found in the third great philosophic realm of axiology. Axiology is the branch of philosophy that deals with the questions of "What is of value?" which is stemmed from the fact that people are valuing beings who prefer some things over others. Therefore, rational individual and social life is based upon a system of values.
