Petersen, Victor S. Kennedy, William C. Dennison, W. Michael Kemp, 2010-01-23

Enclosed ecosystem experiments have gained in popularity as research tools in ecological science particularly in the study of coastal aquatic environments. These systems provide scientists with a degree of experimental control that is not achievable through field experiments. Yet to date techniques for systematically extrapolating results from small scale experimental ecosystems to larger deeper more open more biologically diverse and more heterogeneous ecosystems in nature have not been well developed. Likewise researchers have lacked methods for comparing and extrapolating information among natural ecosystems that differ in scale. Enclosed Experimental Ecosystems and Scale Tools for Understanding and Managing Coastal Ecosystems provides scientists managers and policy makers with an introduction to what has been termed the problem of scale and presents information that will allow for improved design and interpretation of enclosed experimental aquatic ecosystems. The book integrates the results of a 10 year research project involving a multi disciplinary team of scientists and students to explore scale related questions in a variety of coastal habitats. Anticipating use as a reference the book has been designed so that individual sections and individual pages can function as stand alone units.

Changing preferences through experimental games Stopnitzky, Yaniv, 2016-12-16. Much policy interest in sanitation and hygiene promotion focuses on changing behavior and increasing demand for these goods. Yet the effectiveness of large scale interventions has been mixed in large part because of the difficulty of changing attitudes on deeply rooted behaviors. This study tests whether an experiential learning exercise structured around an experimental game can be used to shift preferences around sanitation and hygiene. A minimum coordination game is adapted to the sanitation and hygiene setting by linking game choices to real world investment decisions and payoffs in terms of health and status. Individuals from 20 villages in rural Tamil Nadu were randomly assigned to one of three groups: one that played a game in which communication between rounds was allowed, another that played a game in which communication was prohibited, and a control group that only completed a survey. Based on a comparison of survey responses across treatment arms, the game improved stated preferences in relation to sanitation and hygiene. This effect was larger when communication was allowed and men responded on average more strongly than women across both versions of the game. These results suggest that experimental games can be a valuable tool not only for the study of decision making but for improving participants knowledge and pro sanitation preferences.
